Cyclists prepare for annual LotoJa

Shane Frazier
sports writer

Cyclists from seven states and many walks of life will gather in Cache Valley to kickoff the 13th annual LotoJa bike race Saturday.

The 203 mile road race will take off from Sunrise Cyclery at 6:45 a.m., where over 250 entrants will be separated into groups according to ability and experience. The reasoning behind this is so experienced riders aren't riding alongside less traveled riders, which has happened before, sometimes ending in mass pileups.

Each respective group will leave for Jackson, Wyo., at five minute intervals. The most experienced riders will leave first, followed by beginners, women, tandems and finally citizens.

Each rider has to supply his or her own support crew, who trace the racing route in vehicles, stopping at the five feeding stops spread about 35 miles apart throughout the race, to feed and coach their cyclist.

Riders will travel through several windy valleys and canyons along the way, making team members a very appreciated commodity.

The lead rider of a group will forge the way through the wind at a good pace, all the while blocking the wind, or "drafting", for his teammates. After a few miles the lead rider drops to the back of the pack, to recuperate and draft off the next leader.

"Drafting is very important in bike racing," said Sunrise Cyclery employee Doug Gilbert. "The strongest guy doesn't always win — it's usually the smartest guy."

Though riders travel in groups, officials score each cyclist individually, allowing them to earn points. After a rider scores a certain amount of points, the United States Cycling Federation (USCF) decides whether a rider should be graduated to the next level.

A rider earns points for each race he or she enters, and when they get to a certain amount, the USCF decides whether they should be graduated to the next level.

A cyclist's workout uses a fairly easy concept. Peddle for a couple of hours and don't lift weights. That's right, no weights. A cyclist uses few anaerobic muscles, which makes weightlifting almost counterproductive.

But a serious racer must do more than work on the physical aspect of the race. They must have immense knowledge about their bike and know the tricks of the trade, like when to be in a certain gear.

Competitors are encouraged to ride with others who have the same experience and knowledge, so they won't detract from the teams' overall success.

"It's a huge team sport. Some guys from Salt Lake and I are figuring out a plan to get at least a couple of us at the head of the pack," said two-time finisher Gilbert.

Jared Dixon, also of Sunrise, compares the physical aspects of the LotoJa to running a marathon. A participant must be able to eat and drink while exerting excessive amounts of energy.

Marathoners may count themselves lucky after seeing the saddle-soars caused by endless hours of sitting and peddling that are inevitable.

After the first few miles of the race, the cyclists will be eating almost constantly. Normal food doesn't work too well because it doesn't digest quick enough to give the athlete energy right away.

Prize money is dangled in front of all participants, but the biggest purse ($1000) will go to the biker who can break John Frye's record of eight hours, two minutes and six seconds.

Frye, whose name alone generates publicity, will be present, decked in Lycra to defend his title.

One variable the riders don't want to have to face is the weather. In years past there has been wind, rain and snow.

But the weather should be prime for racing Saturday, according to the race organizer, who wants to remain anonymous.

Riders in the past have faced unique setbacks, to say the least. One year in Wyoming a lone police officer wasn't aware of the race, and actually tried to pull over some of the lead riders. The incident was eventually smoothed over, and the race resumed.

Right now the race is bigger and better than it has ever been. Plans for next year's race are already underway, and among them is an idea floating around to make the race two days long.

If the race was lengthened, the new territory would include a ride through Driggs and Teton Pass in Idaho.

After the riders sprint past the finish line, cool off in the Jackson air and sleep off their stiffness, an awards ceremony will be held at Teton Festival Hall Sunday morning at 10.

Held in the tradition of a one day European road classic ...

13th Annual LOTOJA Classic
Logan, Utah to Jackson Hole Wyoming
203 Miles, September 23, 1995

October 15, 1995

Dear Participants:

Sorry about the delay in getting the results to you. The demands of the real world took their toll.

Thank you for participating in the 13th year of the LOTOJA Classic. Unusually, there were no moving obstacles (cattle, sheep, moose, bear) on the road. But there one place of construction which was new to the race. It definitely helped develop our motocross bike handling skills. In fact with the help of the construction, there was one record that was broken. More neutral support wheels were used this year than any other, unofficially of course.

The head winds from Hoback to Teton Village slowed times a little. Not to mention the temperature of some of those cold pockets between Logan and Preston. However, every person who lined up at the start line learned something about themselves, the weather, the terrain, or their bike they didn't know before.

This race is a battle of mind over body. Some of the more experienced riders have experienced the mental battle enough to be able to manage it. After overcoming the mind game, some move on to compete against the others in their category. No matter how often any of us win the mind game, it doesn't mean you'll be the victor the next time. Just because you finished this year doesn't mean you finish next. It still takes as much training and preparation as it did before.

We thank you again for your participation. We thank the sponsors for all of their contributions. We thank the numerous volunteers for their long hours of preparation. We thank the EMT's, the HAM radios operators, officials, and mechanics. We thank your family and friends for being willing to feed you and take you home. We also thank the state transportation departments for their cooperation. Some of the towns and cities along the way think we are an inconvenience for the day, but they let us do it anyway. The law enforcement men and women were very supportive this year. Thank them when you see them even if it is on the edge of the road with their light flashing in your rear view mirror. Thank you for obeying the most of the traffic laws.

Thank you again, we hope to see you again next year. This race will continue to get better and bigger. We hope you noticed the difference. Fresca Cup???

Sincerely,

The LOTOJA Classic Committee
